

MAJOR GENERAL ALBERT W. STUBBLEBINE III

US Army, Retired

MG Stubblebine was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Armor in 1952 following graduation from the US Military Academy. He spent the first third of his career in Armor units and as an Instructor at the US Military Academy where he taught chemistry.

In 1968, following three years of duty with the US Army Imagery Interpretation Center, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence, Department of Army (OACSI-DA), he joined the Military Assistance Command, Vietnam (MACV) Headquarters in Vietnam and later was G2, 25th Infantry Division. He was the third MI officer to ever serve as a primary staff officer in a combat division.

Returning to OACSI-DA, MG Stubblebine was selected for a special study group that analyzed the tactical use of national systems for the first time. He distinguished himself by developing and implementing the echelons above corps portion of the Army Intelligence architecture, and conceiving and developing the first application of Critical Node Targeting on the electronic battlefield.

Following attendance at the National War College in 1971, MG Stubblebine took command of the US Army Imagery Interpretation Center, Fort Holabird. Subsequently, he served as Executive to the Deputy Director, Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) and DA Chief of Research, Development, and Acquisition; Commander, 902nd MI Group; Director, Intelligence Systems at Army Materiel Command; and Director, Tactical/Strategic Intelligence, OACSI-DA.

Selected for general officer rank, MG Stubblebine commanded the US Army Intelligence Center and School from 1977 to 1979. As Commandant, he played a vital role in the conceptualization, design, and development of the first Army Intelligence architecture. In 1979, he took command of the US Army Electronics Research and Development Command where he oversaw the research, development, and acquisition of a wide variety of electronic intelligence systems. MG Stubblebine's active service culminated as the Commander, US Army Intelligence and Security Command.

MG Stubblebine retired from active duty in 1984. His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit (1 Oak Leaf Cluster), the Bronze Star Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal (2 Oak Leaf Clusters), the Air Medal, and the Army Commendation Medal (1 Oak Leaf Cluster). He is also authorized to wear the General Staff Identification Badge and the Distinguished Service Medal.

MG Stubblebine was inducted into the MI Hall of Fame in 1990.
